

#349: Another Thing We Never Realized Was So Darn Risky

This high-risk scene comes to us from the U.K., where bridge crossings over small canals are apparently unusually hazardous. "Caution - Hold the side rail at all times whilst on the bridge," the warning sign says.

Note the life-ring posted to the right.

The only question is, do people have to walk to the center, read the sign, then walk back over to the side to hold onto the rail? Wouldn't it be better to just tell them, "Walk in the center"?

"No wonder my job is getting harder and harder," our contributor observed.
